

And then the Big Crash came...

4 years ago, I wrote an op-ed on what was about to happen in America. My analysis and prediction was right on the money and within 5 months, everything I had predicted had come to pass. I called the article Money and Economic Collapse. Well... I know everything looks like things are getting better, and I don't want to be Mr. Doom and Gloom, but it is time to sound the drums again, and here is why.

The key factors I based my original op-ed on have returned on steroids and in full bloom. Oil and gas prices have returned to over $4 a gallon because it is still traded on the stock market rather than by supply and demand. The stock market has returned to its crazy artificially high and unrealistic levels. Toxic derivatives are at world-wide unprecedented highs. The merchant princes continue siphoning off the money that the federal reserve pumped into the world economies through the Federal reserves branches of the IMF and World Bank (7.77 trillion dollars was pumped in to keep the world and America's economy from collapsing after the 2008 almost collapse, but it was kept hidden from everyone until about 8 months ago when they admitted what they had done). The rate of the siphoning of the money injected is at such a rate now, that the gears of the economic engine will start seizing up again within this year as the money that lubricates the economic gears disappears and dries up.

Put simply, all paths point to a drying up of the lubrication (money) injected because the rich and powerful Mega-corporations and Merchant Princes continued and increased the rate of their greedy policies which brought us to the brink last time. This time, however, the Federal Reserve, IMF and World Bank can not re-inject money where they would need to in order to stave off the big crash. Banks have tons of liquid cash now but it is at the consumer level that the cash is needed to invigorate the economy. There is too much money at the top (Mega-corps, MP's, Banking system, Stock Market) and not enough money left nor any way to get it back to the bottom (the masses of the working class people) to bring the economic engine back to life and growth. The Federal Reserve has no way to inject back into the bottom, nor will the MP's do it.

Soon the engine will start faltering again as the last of the added money is siphoned back out by the greedy top 1%. The engine will jerk again, starting, stopping, and groaning. Unfortunately, this time all the methods used before to get it running again can not and will not work. The government (federal and state) is financially broke. The banks are flush with faux money and enjoy high liquidity but with very few businesses they are willing to risk it on except the rich corporations that don't need it. The Federal Reserve has nowhere to inject the money because their banks are stuffed from the last injection and there is no room left to lower interest rates on their money. The Federal Reserve already buys 80% of the US treasury bonds just to keep our government afloat. The merchant princes have taken control of all the important commodities necessary to sustain the lives of the masses, and they want even more money for it so they can maintain their control and power over the politicians, laws, resources and people.

In short, there is nothing left to save us (and them but they are too greedy to realize it). This time, the faltering and seizing gears will get worse and worse until the entire engine comes to a screeching halt (that will take almost a few years for a total freeze) but when it happens, things will get real bad. I wish my news was better. I know it looks like things are getting better and that America is strong. Unfortunately, it is an illusion and sham as my fellow Americans and the entire world is soon to learn. This big collapse is much bigger, uglier, and more dangerous than anything the masses experienced last time. Sometimes, seeing when you can do nothing about it is worse than being surprised when bad shit happens “unexpectedly”. Good luck everyone.

True and Faithful, as always
