

PUC IT ALL

In my sojourn upon this planet, I have perceived that everything in our universe is composed of 3 separate and distinct “substances” or a mixture of these “substances”. I use the term “substance” because I have never found another word in the English language to describe these “things”. Unfortunately, the word substance has a particular meaning specific to the material world, and so works only as an analogy to my intent. Because these 3 “substances” I am about to describe are completely unique and not composed of other “elements” or “substances”, and each “substance” has properties unique to itself, I feel the word substance is not proper for terms of classification or this paper. Therefore, since there is no word in the current time frame for the classification of these “substances”, I will name them PUCs. It is an acronym for Primary Universal Component.

The first PUC that I wish to identify is neither controversial, nor has undue baggage associated with the words that make up the identifying name. For lack of a single word for this PUC, I will call it by its most recognizable forms, MATTER/ENERGY. Since matter is just very slow moving energy and therefore appears to exhibit different properties but is really the same “substance”, for simplicities sake I will call this PUC by the acronym of M/E. Since human science has already spent an enormous amount of time and effort categorizing the nature and properties of M/E, I will not delve too deeply in this paper into this PUC other than to identify it and give it a name.

The second PUC that I need to identify is both controversial and does have baggage associated with the words that make up its identifying name. Unfortunately, I can not ignore this PUC because without identifying it, many of the myriad properties of the universe become incomprehensible and many of the observations of science become impossible to understand. Also, as a primary component of the Universe, it would be wrong to ignore it just because many humans have not the ability nor trained themselves to be able to perceive or understand the nature and properties of this PUC, and because they have baggage associated with the words I choose to name it. Just as most humans have not trained their minds to perceive the nature and properties of M/E (singularities, quantum phenomena, atomic matter, etc.), so also do most humans fail miserably at understanding and perceiving this second PUC. Just like a human needs proper training and years of experience to grasp basic concepts of M/E, the same is true for the second PUC, S/E. So what is S/E? Please don't shut down or stop reading because of the words I am forced to use to describe its nature, nor carry the baggage you have attached to those words because of your upbringing. Put plainly, S/E is Spirit/Essence. This PUC is so basic and omni present through out this Universe that to ignore it would make defining the 3 PUCs of this universe and their properties completely useless. Please give me a chance to explain.

When this universe was created incorporating the “substance” of the three PUCs, the second PUC which was dispersed throughout it along with the M/E is of a completely different “substance” than M/E. Because S/E is so very different in nature and properties from M/E, different tools must be used to both perceive and describe it. Like M/E, the two natures of S/E appear to be different and appear to have different properties, but really are two sides of the same thing. Like M/E, the S/E has a direct and measurable effect on the properties of the third PUC (S/T) which I will cover later in this paper. So what is the nature and properties of S/E? Essence is diffuse, quickly moving, and where it clumps together and slows down, changes form to “spirit”. This appears much like energy which when slowed down and clumped together, turns into matter. Essence is not really a form of “energy” (it isn’t energy in the M/E sense, but that is its closest analogous), I only used it to compare its properties. Not wanting to get into spiritual or religious parallels or arguments which really have nothing to do with this paper, suffice it to say that thickened/slowed essence which I have called spirit is not by nature necessarily present within all matter. Whether M/E energy is clumped and slowed doesn’t predicate that essence would clump within that same form. Like matter, “spirit” clumps and groups together based on favorable conditions relative to its own properties. Just like you probably can’t see or perceive quantum phenomena without a trained and capable mind and experienced teachers, so in the same fashion is it also difficult to perceive or understand S/E in all of its myriad manifestations. If you are born with a brilliant mind, you might possibly spontaneously perceive atomic or galactic structures and the quantum world on your own, but it is so unlikely and improbable that it nears the realm of impossibility. It would be a one in umpteen trillion kind of chance to spontaneously occur. Yet just because your mind can’t or doesn’t perceive those aspects of M/E in no way means that it doesn’t exist. The same is true with S/E.

Along the same vein, just because you might have been born with the matter of an intelligent or even brilliant mind (a chance manifestation grouping of M/E), that alone in no way gives you the equally improbable chance manifestation or a grouping of clumped S/E necessary to both perceive and understand the nature and properties of Spirit/Essence. Quite the opposite, the chances of getting both M/E and S/E glumped in one space at one time frame is so unlikely that it might not even naturally occur once in the entire creation of the universe. Just like in M/E, you would need a very unique and dense configuration of S/E to even hope to use the structure generated by your “S/E” to detect and influence other glumpings of the complexity that is S/E. A brain is for detecting and organizing M/E only and just because we are all born with one, that doesn’t mean that we are all equal in our abilities to perceive M/E. This same analogy is also true in the domain of Spirit/Essence. Suffice it to say that I am unequivocally stating that the second PUC within this universe is this “substance” which I have labeled S/E. In the past, it was universally believed that the world must be flat because that is what our eyes see, right? That is what they believed for ages because that is all they could perceive with their own two eyes. Anyone who believed it is round or spherical must be crazy, is what they said. The truth will never be predicated upon the mis-perceptions of mans mind. You may ignore this second PUC for now if your mind has too much trouble believing that it truly exists.

The third PUC present in our universe has already been labeled and perceived by other minds and named Space/Time. S/T can, to an extent, be measured and perceived with the tools of M/E. Yet even so, some of the greatest minds of this planet have made fatal errors in the nature and understanding of S/T, thus causing some of the largest and irreconcilable conundrums of science and all but halting mans understandings about the true structure of the universe. Unfortunately, Einstein himself started mankind off course and once off the track, human minds blithely proceeded down that wrong path. Einstein spent the last 30 productive years of his life trying to unify the forces of M/E futilely because he made one wrong perception early on. Everyone else, thinking along his lines, has blundered along just as helplessly. Let me explain since scientists around the world will find the information I will convey about this last PUC to be the most fascinating and useful of this entire paper. It will ultimately enable man to understand the true nature of gravity and thus combine the fundamental forces of nature while at the same time resolve the major “problems” of observable phenomena in the universe.

Put simply, Einstein was wrong in one way when he stated that matter warps S/T. What he should have stated was that one of the primary properties of S/T is that it attempts to penetrate into the smallest levels of both M/E and S/E, and that the presence of either (or both) impedes that penetration or flow of S/T which results in the force of gravity. Like water trying to penetrate the small holes in a drain causes a force that pushes into the drain, Gravity, in essence, is a property of S/T that is only exhibited when you impede the nature of S/T with a “substance” (IE: M/E or S/E). The denser the concentration of M/E or S/E, the greater the force S/T exerts in its attempt to penetrate through from all directions at once. Because S/T is a 4th dimensional phenomena, man doesn’t perceive how it works easily, or the properties inherent in it. That is why it doesn’t matter how large an object is filling S/T but only how dense it is that determines the gravity that object creates. This is also why two objects in space push together when they get to a certain distance from each other. The force S/T exerts on the outside of the objects is greater than the splitting of that force between the two objects, ultimately forcing them together. When looked at from this perspective, quantum gravity makes perfect sense.

Suffice it to say, based on the information I have just supplied, if you begin to understand and work on the true nature of gravity, the universe becomes our limit. Figure out how to flip on and off the “density” of M/E on one side of a material in space and you can move ships, asteroids, and ultimately worlds. Because of the dual nature of all 3 PUCs, the extension of this, since space and time are aspects of the same PUC, is that we will be able to traverse anywhere/anywhen in the universe. This is a long way in the future, but as inevitable as time itself once mankind understands and decodes the true nature of PUC 3, S/T.

In summary, what I am saying above, by outlining the 3 PUCs that make up our universe, is that although they are of varying degrees of “controversy” at this point in time, I absolutely know that these PUCs exist, and those who wish to understand this universe must learn to identify and understand the properties of these PUCs if they ever wish to truly grasp it. The last PUC that mankind and especially the future will be able to perceive and believe is the second one, S/E. That is fine. Everything in its time. For now, focus on PUC 3 and you can reconcile your conundrums, unite the forces down to the quantum level, and open up the universe.

... everything is NNNNNNNNNNOOOOOOOOOOOWWWWWWWWWW.
